LOAD O' LAUGHS

When little Stewie reached his sixth birthday, his parents gave him a real watch as a birthday present. The youngster was very much proud of it and would stroll down the street and every so often would stop to study it with deep, deep thought.

It wasn't long before he met his friend who wide-eyed the gift with hungry eyes.

"Gee, Stewie," asked the friend, "What time is it, huh?"

The boy turned to his watch and after gazing at it doubtfully for a moment, answered, "er—two inches to three!"

* * *

The mother decided to give her twin sons a bath and after drawing the water, placed them in the bathtub. Leaving the room for a moment, she suddenly heard one of the twins start to cry. She poked her head through the door and started to fall back in a faint as she heard the boy shout:

"Mommy, mommy! Make Bobby come up from under the water! It's my turn to be the plug!"

* * *

Two monkeys, hanging from a tree by their tails, looked down at one of their social outcasts who strutted past dressed in a suit of clothes.

"He wouldn't be such a bad egg," remarked one, "if he'd just forget all that silly nonsense about evolution!"

* * *

The teacher marched annoyingly over to the young student and exclaimed:

"I wish you'd forget your father's butcher store! Four plus two is six, I tell you—not seven!"

* * *

Poppa Dinasaur noticed his young offspring shaking frightfully.

"What's wrong with Junior?" he asked.

"Oh, Junior just woke up from having an absolutely preposterous nightmare," replied Momma Dinasaur. "Something about finding himself in a place called The Museum of Natural History!"

* * *

Hodges walked out of the office of his employer with a sad frown on his face. A fellow employee noticing the depressed expression, inquired what might be wrong.

"I don't think the boss approves of my work any more," spoke up the man suddenly.

"What makes you say that?" continued to quiz the other fellow.

"His friendly slaps on the back are getting lower, and lower and lower!"

* * *

Bixby was driving his auto along the highway without a care in the world when suddenly the car behind him crashed smack into his rear fender. He quickly dashed out and discovered the driver to be none other than a woman. He pulled out a paper and pencil and started scribbling down the license number of the vehicle.

"Oh, please, please," begged the woman, "don't turn my license number over to the police."

"Don't worry, I won't," snarled the man. "I'm giving this to my brother. He drives a ten-ton truck!"

* * *

Tom and Jerry pondered for a few minutes as to what game they could play.

"I got it," exclaimed Tom. "Let's make believe we're Senators and investigate somebody!"

* * *

Kentucky Kate approached her husband who was sitting beneath a shady tree moaning quietly to himself.

"What yo' need, Paw," suggested the woman, "is some exercise."

"Exercise?" screamed the old Kentuckian. "Shuckin's, Maw, you know I ain't got no faith in them there patent medicines!"

The owner of a optical store had just hired a new clerk and was giving the man instructions about how to charge a customer.

"After you've fitted the customer with glasses," said the owner, "you say—the charge is twenty dollars'. Then pause for a moment and see if he flinches. If he doesn't flinch, you then say,—'that's for the frames. The lenses will be another five dollars'. Then you wait again and watch for the flinch and if the customer doesn't flinch THIS time, you say—'EACH!' "

* * *

MacTavis, seeking a well-planned vacation, visited the various travel bureaus and discovered that a sea voyage to any foreign port was quite expensive. Frowning at the high costs, MacTavish returned home, rummaged through the attic for several minutes and found what he was searching for—a surfboard. Beaming with satisfaction, he returned to one of the travel agencies with the surfboard tucked under his arm and asked:

"How much would it cost to tow me across?"

* * *

Hy: "My Pop is a musical fish."

Low: "A musical fish? Wh-What's that?"

Hy: "Ain't you ever heard of a piano tuna?"

* * *

The young mother holding her three-year old son by the hand, stopped before the entrance to the racetrack and after studying the many adult fans streaming into the park, queried the ticket-taker:

"Why are all those men and women going in? I understood this race to be for just three-year olds!"

* * *

While the bride and groom were taking their vows, one guest nudged another and asked:

"How come they're dressed in bathing suits?"

The other guest smiled: "Oh, they're going right to Florida for their honeymoon!"

* * *

The husband picked up the ringing phone:

"Hello? . . . What? You're making a radio survey to find out what I'm listening to? Are you kiddin'? My wife, o'course—who else?"

* * *

Two sparrows, parents of a fine, upstanding son, sat out on a branch and watched their offspring squat in the nest reading a book on Aero-Dynamics.

Poppa Sparrow studied his son for a while and then spoke up:

"Hmpf! . . . in my day, all you did was just jump off and flap your wings!"

* * *

The madame went into the dress shop and after glancing through the line, came upon a dress which intrigued her.

"That'll be seventy-five dollars," informed the salesgirl.

"Seventy-five dollars?" gasped the madame. "Why, I simply will not pay such an exorbitant price like that—no indeed. I'll charge it!"

* * *

A farmer, who used a mule for any hauling that had to be done, was approached by a fellow farmer one day who asked:

"Say, Lem. what's the name o'yer mule?"

"Ah calls 'im Public Service Corporation," answered the farmer.

"What on earth made ya' give 'im a name like that?" quizzed the other scratching his head.

"Cause," replied the farmer, "that there mule can stand more abuses and still go right on having its own way!"

* * *

The ambulance pulled over to the curb and the two carriers carted their victim on stretcher into his house. The wife opened the door, looked down at her unconscious husband and asked:

"Have a tough day at the office, dear?"

* * *

The teen-ager picked up the phone and was pleased to find that her friend, Janie, was at the other end of the line.

Janie: "Would ya' like to go to the movies, huh?"

Teen-ager: "Well-l-l . . . I have to do the dishes, do my History homework, study for my English exam, take Dad's suit to the tailor, buy some groceries for Mom . . . er-okay, I'll meet you at the Bijou in five minutes!"
